A true short story depicting the life of a bush pilot in Sudan in the early 1980s. The author recounts his personal experiences when flying clients involved in Aid Organisations. The story describes the inherent politics and sometimes the duplicity of individuals involved in the business of providing and distributing aid. This is a stand alone story and fifth in the African Bush Pilot Series. The book describes the challenges faced by a pilot flying in Sudan, at a time when there were few navigation aids and operating an aircraft where no formal runways existed was part of the job.
