From flamingos and herons to eagles and buzzards, Doñana National Park attracts both migratory birds and resident species throughout the year. The park is a crucial stopover for countless bird species during their annual migration, making it a true paradise for birdwatchers.

As you explore the park's diverse ecosystems, including marshes, dunes, and forests, you are likely to encounter rare and endangered species such as the Spanish Imperial Eagle and the Iberian Lynx. Be sure to bring your binoculars and camera to capture these breathtaking moments.

Marismas del Odiel Natural Park

Located near the city of Huelva, the Marismas del Odiel Natural Park is another must-visit destination for bird enthusiasts. This wetland area, comprising salt marshes, lagoons, and estuaries, serves as a vital breeding ground for numerous aquatic birds.

As you wander through the park, keep an eye out for species like the Purple Swamphen, the Azure-winged Magpie, and the Western Swamphen. Guided tours and observation points are available, allowing you to fully immerse yourself in the wonders of this stunning natural park.

Sierra de Aracena and Picos de Aroche Natural Park

For those seeking a different birding experience, the Sierra de Aracena and Picos de Aroche Natural Park is a hidden gem nestled in the mountains of Huelva. This park offers a combination of wooded areas, hidden valleys, and rocky landscapes, making it a haven for various raptor species.

As you hike through the park's trails, you may come across majestic birds of prey such as the Short-toed Eagle, the Eurasian Eagle-Owl, and the European Honey Buzzard. The tranquil atmosphere and breathtaking views will make your birding adventure in this natural park unforgettable.

Punta Umbria

If you want to experience birdwatching in a coastal setting, head to Punta Umbria. This small town is situated between the Atlantic Ocean and the Odiel Marshes, offering a diverse array of bird species.

From gulls and waders to terns and spoonbills, Punta Umbria provides an excellent opportunity to observe seabirds and shorebirds in their natural habitat. The sandy beaches and open vistas create a picturesque backdrop for birdwatching, ensuring an enjoyable and memorable experience for bird lovers of all levels.

Andalusia's Huelva province is a true haven for birdwatching enthusiasts. Whether you are captivated by the sight of raptors soaring overhead, or you find solace in observing colorful wetland birds, Huelva offers something for every bird lover.

The province of Huelva is home to one of the most important wetlands in Spain: Doñana National Park. This large wetland, which extends eastwards into the province of Seville, holds enormous populations of waterbirds, including ducks, geese, waders, terns, herons and flamingos. There are also many raptors and passerines. It is no surprise that this place attracts countless visitors from abroad, who wish to enjoy the wonders of the southern European bird life. However, for the visiting birdwatcher, this province has much more to offer. The Marismas del Odiel, a large estuary in front of Huelva, holds one of the most important colonies of flamingos in Spain and also attracts an array of waterbirds, especially waders and gulls. Along the coast there are several other estuaries and coastal lagoons, and although they lack the huge numbers of birds present at Doñana, they often several exciting species, such as Ferruginous Duck, Audouin's and Slender-billed Gulls and Caspian Tern, often allowing close approaches. Away from the coast there are also some exciting places. The Campiña de Huelva is a strip of open country which is a great place to look for birds of prey, including Montagu's Harrier and some smaller steppe birds, such as Calandra Lark. With luck, one can also find the scarce Olivaceous Warbler, which reaches its western limit around here. Further north, around Tharsis and Puebla de Guzmán, one can find some old mines, which are home to the elusive Eagle-owl, along with Blue Rock Thrush and the rare White-rumped Swift. Finally, in the northern third of the province, there are the hills of Sierra de Huelva. This area holds a large population of Cinereous Vulture, and also many interesting passerines, such as Cirl and Rock Buntings, Iberian Chiffchaff and Rock Sparrow.
