Why do people travel? Have they created a checklist of things to do before they die? Do they feel they have only accomplished something with their lives when it is filled with more than the ordinary memories or do they enjoy meeting the people that seek the same type of adventure and mode of travel in life?

Do they need to see how others live in all corners of the globe? Are travellers actually looking for the corners of a sphere? By the way, there are no corners, and Earth is not a sphere. It is an oblate spheroid, in other words, a sphere with an equatorial bulge.

Are there others who live their lives oblivious to the goals that travellers deem important? Sometimes people need to leave their own country and family to appreciate what they are missing or perhaps even appreciate their country and family more.

An engineering work term not only proved that engineering is more valuable than Dan Anda sometimes admits, but it also allowed him to see Indonesia from the perspective of a local not of a tourist. Although he had never been in Asia before, he went there fully expecting their culture, government, religion and ethics to be quite different from Canada; however, he still was not prepared for what he found. Indonesia moves to a different beat.
