The Power of Long Descriptive Keywords in Costume Design

When it comes to costume design, using long descriptive keywords is essential, especially for the alt attribute, which provides alternative text for visually impaired users or when an image fails to load. Crowood Theatre Companions recognizes the importance of accessibility and encourages designers to choose relevant, informative keywords that accurately describe their costume designs.

By employing long descriptive keywords, you not only enhance the accessibility of your designs but also improve their search engine optimization (SEO) value. This ensures that your designs are more likely to be discovered by fellow designers, directors, and potential collaborators.

For example, instead of using a vague alt attribute like "costume", opt for descriptive keywords such as "elaborate Renaissance gown with intricate gold embroidery". Not only does this provide a clear and vivid description, but it also attracts individuals who may be specifically looking for inspiration or guidance on Renaissance-era costumes.
