Discipleship lies at the heart of Christianity, as Jesus himself commanded his followers to go and make disciples of all nations. By actively engaging in discipleship, we not only fulfill Jesus' commandment but also contribute to the building of a strong, unified, and spiritually mature community.

Additionally, making disciples allows for personal growth and transformation. When we commit ourselves to the process of discipleship, we embark on a journey of self-discovery, selflessness, and spiritual enrichment. As we pour into others, we are simultaneously filled with wisdom, love, and a deeper understanding of God's word.

The Model: Unlocking the Secrets

Now, let us unveil the model for making disciples, developed through years of research, study, and practical application. This model encompasses four key stages that encompass the entire discipleship process:

1. Establishing a Strong Foundation

Every disciple needs a solid foundation to build upon. This stage involves introducing new believers to the core tenets of the Christian faith. It includes teaching foundational doctrines, facilitating Bible studies, and providing guidance through mentorship programs. Emphasizing the importance of prayer, worship, and developing a personal relationship with God is crucial during this stage.

2. Cultivating Spiritual Practices

The second stage focuses on equipping disciples with a range of spiritual practices essential for their growth. These practices may include regular Bible reading, meditation, fasting, and participating in corporate worship. By encouraging disciples to develop these habits, we instill in them a deep-rooted commitment to personal spiritual disciplines.

3. Encountering Personal Transformation

At this stage, disciples are encouraged to cultivate a deep sense of self-awareness and engage in a process of inner transformation. Through guided reflections, introspection, and soul-searching activities, disciples are given an opportunity to confront their weaknesses, overcome their shortcomings, and grow in Christ-likeness. It is during this stage that repentance, forgiveness, and humility become integral components of the discipleship journey.

4. Multiplication and Leadership Development

In the final stage, disciples are empowered to multiply their knowledge, experiences, and passions by becoming leaders themselves. This stage revolves around equipping disciples with leadership skills, enabling them to mentor and disciple others effectively. By cultivating a culture of multiplication, we ensure the continuous expansion and growth of the Kingdom of God.

The Power in Action

Now that we have delved into the various stages of our model, let us witness its power as it is put into action. By adopting this model in various churches, communities, and personal settings, we have seen countless lives transformed, spiritual families formed, and a ripple effect of discipleship taking root.

John Wesley was an eighteenth-century Anglican priest and Oxford tutor. He and George Whitefield were the primary leaders of the Evangelical Awakening which had a profound effect on the spiritual, social, and political life of both England and colonial America. Wesley gathered converts into a network of small groups for personal accountability, behavioral change, leadership training, and the transformation of their communities. Central to his system was the “class meeting,” which proved to be one of the most effective tools for making disciples ever developed. This study examines the historical development, the theological foundation, and the social outcomes of John Wesley’s class meeting.
