While attempting to free a kidnapped family, Marshal Travis Brewer's lead deputy is gunned down by the cornered stagecoach robbers. The sole survivor of the hostages is fifteen year-old Bud Cotton. With no kin, or place to call home, Marshal Brewer takes the boy under his wing, as his new assistant. It seems a mite kinder than sending the lad to an orphanage, and soon young Bud shows promise with his duties minding the jail cells.

When a local rancher suspects someone is rustling his cattle and changing the brands to hide the crime, the Marshal sends his new deputies and Bud to investigate. They're ambushed and it's only by the gumption of Bud's handiwork with a sawed-off shotgun they get away in one piece. In recognition of the boy's cool head and sharp shooting, Marshal Brewer makes young Bud a full-fledged deputy and adds him to his posse.

The rustlers are still on the loose, but after the leaders of the gang decide to take up some bank robbing, Marshal Brewer takes to their trail. He and Bud will stop at nothing to make sure the gang end up dead or behind bars.

It's another crackerjack western, loaded with nonstop action, showdowns, chases and stark frontier justice from best-selling author W.R. Benton.
