The Art and Practice of Dowsing

At its core, dowsing is a form of intuition-based divination. Practitioners tune into their inner energies and the subtle cues of the environment to obtain answers to their questions. Divining tools, such as Y-shaped rods or pendulums, act as conduits for energy, amplifying the dowser's sensitivity.

During a dowsing session, the dowser poses a question or establishes an intention, then walks the area while holding the tools. As they approach a target, the tools respond by crossing each other, rotating, or showing specific patterns of movement. This reaction is believed to indicate the presence of the sought-after object or information.

TAPPING THE POWER OF YOUR SUPERCONSCIOUS MIND

Dowsing is an ancient art that can be understood in terms of modern science. Dowsing can be used as way to access subtle information via changes in the human energy field through changes in the autonomic nerves and micro-muscles of the body, like muscle testing.

It is a form of Biofeedback. For many years, Dowsing was somewhat limited to seeking water, oil or minerals on a property. Many mineral and oil exploration companies still employ Dowzers. Traditional Dowsing can be considered a 'read-only' application, as the Dowser simply asks for information about a place, person or thing and gets 'yes' and 'no' responses to questions as well as quantitative or qualitative data, such as 'percentage of probability' or 'how many gallons per minute', etc.

This data can be read on a numerical 'pie chart', a map, or simply off the digits of your spare hand. The quality of the data depends on the purity of intent, mental clarity and questioning skill of the Dowser, as well as their ability to 'get out of the way' once the question has been put forth.
